The Issue of Electronic Prepublication

It is in the nature of our electronic age that the pace of disseminating scientific information has accelerated through the use of the associated media. Individuals may report their results on personal Web pages, in electronic journals, public computer databases, or news groups. The editors of SYNTHESIS consider any manuscript made available to the public in this form as published and therefore not acceptable. We are strongly committed to maintaining the highest standards of scientific publishing, the essential features of which are the selection of appropriate manuscripts by the editors, the solicitation of critical input by at least two referees who are experts in the subject matter, and the editor's privilege to make a final decision regarding publication.
