

P. Del Rio, P. Dell'Abate

Institute of General Surgery and Organ Transplantation, University of Parma, Parma, Italy

Corresponding Author

P. Del Rio, MD

Institute of General Surgery and Organ Transplantation · University of Parma
Via Gramsci 14 · 43100 Parma · Italy
Fax: +39-0521-992501
E-mail: paolofelisso@hotmail.com

Figure 1 Abdominal pain and fever persisted for 2 months in a 57-year-old woman, following an endoscopic tattooing procedure after polypectomy of a pedunculated polyp. Intra-abdominal and pelvic diffusion of ink could be seen.

Figure 2 Intra-operative view of a reactive lymphadenomegaly in the mesosigmoid. The polyp was an adenocarcinoma with an infiltration of the endoscopic excision line. Colonic resection was performed.