In the case of olanzapine, our data strongly support the hypothesis that the serum concentrations found in patients (54.2 µg/l + 37.8) by Bergemann et al. [2] are not enough to inhibit myeloid progenitors in vitro (concentration of 7.26–13.43 µg/ml), as do the growing number of reports suggesting that olanzapine toxicity leads to both thrombocytopenia and severe agranulocytosis [3, 14, 23, 24].
